Accessing Full Text Articles

1. Go to the Google Scholar homepage and click in the top left corner of the screen.

2. Choose Settings or the in the top right of the menu.
3. Select Library Links from the left-side menu
4. Search for University of California, San Diego
5. Mark check box next to this option.
6. Save

When you search for articles, you will now see an extra column with additional links on the right. Where you see UC-eLinks, you may click it to view the UC-eLinks menu from which you can get the full text through the library databases. From this menu, choose whichever online option is available.

(Note: If you are not logged into the VPN (see home page of this guide), when you choose an article, you will be asked to log in with your UCSD username and password)
If you don’t see either of these icons in a library database:

!HTML Full Text

!PDF Full Text

Use this icon:

!UC-eLinks

It will automatically search for the full text of an article.

It may open up the article automatically, or you will get a menu of options to get the article:

- Choose any of the links to get the article online, if available
- See if the article is available in print (links out to the library catalog)
- Request via interlibrary loan if we don't have it.
